

U.S. Postal Service Announces Leadership Promotions and Structural Modifications

19-11-2020

The U.S. Postal Service today made several leadership announcements, including the retirement of a top executive, the promotion of several other key leaders, and a series of functional alignments that aim to better position the organization to achieve operational excellence and financial stability.

The changes include the announcement that David E. Williams, chief logistics and processing operations officer, intends to retire next year, capping a postal career that has spanned more than three decades.

“Dave Williams has been an outstanding leader within the Postal Service,” said Postmaster General and CEO Louis DeJoy. “During his career with us, he has streamlined mail processing, delivery and operations. Dave has been a leader in driving the use of data and information to advance innovation and system improvements. We value his many contributions and thank him for his distinguished service. I would also like to extend my personal thanks to Dave for all of the assistance he provided to me both before and during my transition to the Postal Service.”

Williams joined the Postal Service as an industrial engineering trainee in 1987 and went on to work in several field, area and headquarters positions, including serving as chief operating officer from 2015-2020.

“The Postal Service has been my life for 33 years,” Williams said. “I love every aspect of this organization, its people and our collective mission to serve America. I will always be thankful to this organization for investing in me at the beginning of my career, and I will always take pride in the work I've done with my colleagues. I look forward to working with my successor and the rest of the team through this year's peak delivery season to ensure a smooth transition into the new year.”

Other leadership appointments and structural modifications announced today include:

Isaac Cronkhite, who currently serves as chief human resources officer, will succeed Williams as chief logistics and processing operations officer. In this role, Cronkhite will oversee 135,000 career employees at more than 300 USPS facilities nationwide. Doug Tulino, labor relations vice president, will become chief human resources officer. He'll be responsible for the professional development of the Postal Service's 644,000-member workforce and oversee labor relations, leadership and career development, compensation and benefits, and recruitment and hiring processes, among other responsibilities.

Katherine Attridge, collective bargaining and arbitration manager, will become labor relations vice president. She'll help manage the Postal Service's relationships with its labor unions and management associations, along with providing Equal Employment Opportunity services for USPS and other organizations.

Tom Foti, product management executive director, will become product solutions vice president and report to Steve Monteith, who will become chief customer and marketing officer after serving in the role on an acting basis since the summer.

In his new role, Foti will oversee Product Solutions, a newly formed organization that will oversee product management, pricing and classification services, product classification, new solutions, commercial acceptance and business acceptance solutions.

Marc McCrery, information technology vice president, will become technology applications vice president, and Bill Koetz, will serve as acting network and compute technology vice president; both will report to Pritha Mehra, who will become chief information officer after serving in the role on an acting basis since the summer.

The groups that McCrery and Koetz will respectively oversee — Technology Applications and Network and Compute Technology — will be created by splitting the Information Technology organizations. Technology Applications will oversee the IT solution centers, enterprise data warehouse and commercial payments and systems, while the Network and Compute Technology group will be responsible for the Postal Service's telecommunication technologies of digital networks and compute technologies of servers, software, cloud and data center operations.

As part of this change, the teams that make up the Mail Entry and Payment Technology group will be aligned with either Product Solutions or Technology Applications. Additionally, the Information Systems teams that support area and district offices will form a new organization, Enterprise Endpoint Technology.

Gary Reblin, product innovation vice president, will become innovative business technology vice president and report to Scott Bombaugh, who will become chief technology officer after serving in the role on an acting basis in the summer.

Innovative Business Technology, a newly formed organization, will oversee mailing services, digital business, product technology innovation, and mail and package information systems.

Linda Malone has been named engineering systems vice president after serving in the position in an acting basis since the summer. She will report to Bombaugh.

Simon Storey, employee resource management vice president, will become human resources vice president, and Jenny Utterback, human resources technology and innovation senior director, will become organization development vice president. Both will report to Chief Human Resources Officer Doug Tulino.

Human Resources will lead the planning and implementation of national human resource programs and policies in the areas of safety and injury compensation, health and medical services, hiring, staffing and retention, among other responsibilities.

Organization Development will be responsible for leading learning and development, compensation and benefits, human resources technology, talent acquisition and diversity, and employee engagement at the headquarters level. This organization will focus on developing programs, policies and processes that align with corporate and human resources strategic initiatives and work closely with the Human Resources and Labor Relations groups. Jeff Adams has been named corporate communications vice president, a role he has served in an acting basis since the summer. In this role, Adams will oversee the Postal Service's relationships with the news media, as well as employee communications, social media and other responsibilities.

These appointments help better align the Postal Service, and also demonstrate our commitment to career development of our own employees by building talent and promoting from within. Altogether, these announcements include 11 promotions, five new officers, two lateral moves and one detail assignment.

These organizational changes will not initiate a reduction-in-force. The hiring freeze, announced in August to facilitate employee reductions through natural attrition, remains in place.

Further organizational modifications are expected to continue in phased approaches during the next several months.
