

Kiwis vote for charities to receive free NZ Post courier services

01-05-2023

NZ Post is calling on Kiwis to vote for their favourite community organisation from the 12 selected for this year's Delivering for Good programme. Delivering for Good is NZ Post's community support programme which provides a year of free courier services to selected charities and social enterprises.

Heading into its third year, the programme selects around a dozen community groups each year to receive a year's worth of free courier services.

The public then gets a chance to vote for the organisation they want to see receive a second year's worth of free courier deliveries. Voting for this year's winner starts today and is open until Sunday 14 May.

From a record number of community organisations who applied this year, here are the charities and social enterprise organisations Post will be supporting with free courier services in FY23-24. Your vote will help one of them receive an extra year's worth:

Arthritis NZ
Asthma New Zealand
Leukaemia & Blood Cancer New Zealand
Heart Kids NZ
The Little Miracles Trust
The Lucy Foundation

Kilmarnock
Ripple
Neighbours Aotearoa
Grandparents Raising Grandchildren
Digital Inclusion Alliance
Able

"Most charities rely on donations, grants and volunteer support to survive and every dollar counts for them," says Carolyn Gubb, Community and Social Impact manager at NZ Post.

"By providing free courier services, we're helping these organisations free up resources which they can then use to expand and develop new areas of their work. It means they can help more people and have an even greater impact."

One such example is Sweet Louise, which supports New Zealanders living with incurable breast cancer.

Gubb says the business launched the Delivering for Good programme to make this kind of difference in the day-to-day running of the country's charities.

"We know how vital the work of charities and social organisations is in supporting our communities," she says. "As part of our social contribution, we wanted to help support that work in an authentic way.

Gubb says organisations currently in the programme include one that provides work and training opportunities for refugee and migrant women.

"Another organisation was able to redirect what would have been spent on couriers into growing their workforce and creating more job opportunities for minority groups," she says.

In the past two years it has been running,

Delivering for Good has supported 25 organisations with over 60,000 free courier deliveries saving around $500K for participating organisations.

Sweet Louise CEO Catrin Devonald says her team was ecstatic to win last year's public vote, which have them an additional year of free courier services.

"I don't think we realised what a difference it was going to make," she says.

As part of its service, Sweet Louise sends support packs and vouchers to its members and their families – and without the usual courier costs, the charity has been able to offer all-important extras like donated Mother's Day gifts and Christmas presents.

Source: NZ Post