

NZ Post to pilot New Zealand's first multi-brand subscription parcel delivery service

07-08-2017

NZ Post is about to launch a trial for a new delivery service for Kiwi online shoppers, called Shipmate. For an up-front payment, shoppers will be entitled to an unlimited number of purchases with no delivery fee from participating online retailers. NZ Post's head of Customer Strategy Brendan Thawley says, "We're excited about this new innovation in the New Zealand market and are delighted that four of The Warehouse Group's brands will be the first to offer the service to their customers"

NZ Post is about to launch a trial for a new delivery service for Kiwi online shoppers, called Shipmate. For an up-front payment, shoppers will be entitled to an unlimited number of purchases with no delivery fee from participating online retailers.

NZ Post's head of Customer Strategy Brendan Thawley says, "We're excited about this new innovation in the New Zealand market and are delighted that four of The Warehouse Group's brands will be the first to offer the service to their customers". www.thewarehouse.co.nz

 Opens in a new window.

, www.noelleeming.co.nz

 Opens in a new window.

, www.torpedo7.co.nz

 Opens in a new window.

“A shared problem for both parcel senders and receivers is that often consumers want to buy small things online but the cost of shipping is too high relative to the purchase. We’re working to deliver solutions for both of these groups.”

CEO of The Warehouse and Warehouse Stationery Pejman Okhovat says the move is part of The Warehouse Group’s mission to become New Zealand’s leading online retailer.

“Customers have been asking us for better online delivery options, and along with our two-hour delivery trial earlier this year, we’re looking forward to further improving our offering with more developments to be rolled out in the coming months.”

and www.warehousestationery.co.nz

 Opens in a new window.

Mr Okhovat said there was a natural synergy in partnering with New Zealand Post, another iconic New Zealand company, to deliver innovations in online shopping to benefit Kiwis. Mr Thawley says that with NZ Post’s innovation mindset and as the only business that can deliver to every household, it is extremely well-positioned to be a key partner for retailers as they grow their online operations. He says the service is deliberately starting small – with a maximum of 5000 customers – and away from a peak period such as Christmas to give NZ Post and The Warehouse opportunity to learn more. The service will initially run for a 2-month period. Registrations are now open, and are being taken until 13 August. The delivery service starts on 14 August.

are all participating.

Mr Thawley says NZ Post has been listening to its customers and is working with them to develop new initiatives to create value for them.

Source: New Zealand Post