UPS (NYSE: UPS) announced today that the company will deploy nearly 40 percent more employees on five continents to contribute to 450 community service projects, in the company's 16th annual Global Volunteer Month. In 2014, CEO David Abney pledged UPS's employees would contribute 20 million volunteer hours by the end of 2020, and the company is on pace to reach this goal.

UPS estimates employees will devote 375,000 volunteer hours in October to projects in North America, Europe, Latin America, Asia Pacific and Indian subcontinent, Middle East and Africa (ISMEA). In 2017, UPS employees completed a record 2.9 million hours of volunteer service, providing more than $80 million in economic impact.

"Our employees are witnessing first-hand the positive effects of humanitarian aid and making communities around the world more resilient through dedicated volunteer hours. Volunteerism is an instrumental part of employee development in providing relief efforts in the wake of extraordinary events like the recent destruction from Hurricane Florence and Typhoon Manghut," said Eduardo Martinez, president of The UPS Foundation and chief diversity and inclusion officer for UPS. "We see UPS employees as true global citizens working on community projects and initiatives that are important to them with the backing of The UPS Foundation's tools and resources for lasting impact. There's a role for UPS in all 17 of the UN Sustainable Development Goals and we aim to highlight the essential work our employees do every day in support of those goals."

Through UPS's membership with IMPACT 2030, UPS encourages employees around the world to get involved in projects that help advance the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals.
